A part of local history

Cley Windmill has been an iconic piece of the North Norfolk landscape since the early 19th century, being first mentioned in the Norfolk Chronicle in 1819. At this time the sails powered two pairs of French burr millstones, a flour mill and jumper, with a third spair of stones and smut machine added in 1875. The mill remained in the same family until around 1912, when it was sold was converted into a holiday home in 1921, with the machinery being removed and the gear wheels being cut in half and used as decoration within the mill.

It survived the devastating 1953 North Sea floods, where the waters flooded the mill to a depth of 8ft. Since then planning permission and listed building consent was sought from North Norfolk District Council to turn the mill and complex into a guesthouse and self-catering units, with the mill opening as a guesthouse on 27 April 1983.

The unique history of the mill has always been at the heart of the restoration process to preserve this fascinating local landmark. Each owner through the generations have painstakingly cared for the mill, from the renewal of the cap gallery, sails and more recently the replacement of the upper walkways and renovations to the bedrooms and out-buildings.
